

Cross Country Trip

It was his journey.

“I spoke with my son today who is driving with a friend across the country. This trip is a journey, a great adventure. It also serves to ensure that he has a car at his school this year.

We spoke on the phone, and I was excited having spent an hour with his mother looking at the map of his route through the Rockies. I began to ask questions, make suggestions and as I did so the silence on the other end grew deeper and darker. I caught myself too late to have avoided the transgression but soon enough that I could correct my actions. He did not need or want my guidance. This is his journey and I needed to absent myself from his experience and wait until “he joined me” and was ready to tell the stories of his adventure.”
